HAIL TO OCTAGENARIAN OSMUND JAYARATNE!

Carlo Fonseka

P rofessor Osmund Jayaratne is on the brink of octagenarianhood. Knowing him as I do, I have reason to believe that three passions have shaped his long, purposeful life: the love of physics, the challenge of politics and the excitement of dramatics.

Born on 2 October 1924, Ossie - as his friends fondly call him - won the prestigious Turnour Prize at Royal College, Colombo, in his time. He gained entrance to the University of Ceylon in 1941, specialized in physics, graduated with honours and went on to acquire a doctorate in the subject from Imperial College, University of London. He ended his distinguished career in acaleme in 1991 as a Professor of Physics in the University of Colombo.

While an undergraduate he joined the Lanka Sama Samaja Party once and for all in 1944, and matured into one of its leading theoreticians. Combining theory with praxis, in the 1950s, Ossic won three successive elections to the Colombo Municipal Council in the name of the Party.

As if reading physics and politicking were not occupation enough for an undergraduate, he was also picked by renowned Professor E.F.C. Ludowyk himself, to play important roles in about a dozen plays. The acme of his achievement in dramatics came in the late 1950s, when under the direction of Professor Ashley Halpe, he played the lead role in Swedish playwright Strindberg's famous play called "The Father". So impressed was one raving critic by Ossie's impassioned performance that he summarily dubbed him "the best actor in the country."

Because his life was so suffused with abstruse physics, principled politics and high quality dramatics, Osinund Jayaratne would be my first choice for the putative title of 'Sri Lanka's last Renaissance Man"

Nobody need tell those who know Ossie well that he is bilingual with a vengeance. The bad news is that Ossie cannot write anymore because he is - as we must perforce say nowadays - visually handicapped. The other day when I gently probed the degree of his visual disability, Ossie - never one to call a spade by any other name - bluntly said: "Look, I am as Ulind as a bat." The good news is that he is not batty. Actually, only the truly sane like Ossie (and me) can emain indefinitely loyal to the LSSP, but that is beside the point. Though unable to put pen to paper, Ossie can still talk accurately, blithely, cogently, definitively, eloquently and fluent . In truth he is a delightful talk-show. He talked to the Social 5 cientists' Association about his life and times which the SSA f. ithfully recorded. The SSA then contracted Mr. Sirisumana Codage - surely Sri Lanka's leading publisher as of now - to put ish the Memoirs of Osmund Jayaratne. To politically consciou: English educated members of the older generation reading Os: ie's memoirs is bound to be a vicarious, nostalgic, even catha tic experience. To socially sensitive members of the younger generation who read and understand English, Ossie's men sirs will provide a glimpse into the sense of inner satisfactio , that comes from unselfish commitment to a visionary goal one believes in. I understand that among those warmly feli itating Professor Osmund Jayaretne on the occasion of his 8th birthday are Her Excellency the Fresident and the Honour ble Prime Minister of the Democratic Socialist Republic o Sri Lanka.

Fittingly, Ossie's memoirs was launched by the SSA at the Dr N.M. Perera Centre, Borella on Friday the 1st of October 2004 at 5 pm. I do not know how much personal history Ossie has recounted in his Memoirs. What I do know is that he has been a public intellectual, and something of a celebrity in academe. Perhaps he has recounted his life like it really was, warts and all. With or without warts, many of his former pupils literally worship their teacher, friend and philosopher, Ossie's cluse . iends can only gape at the devotion with which his wife Joyce (whom he married twice) locks after our amiable buddy. He can still expatiate on the natur of this thing called light which he no longer enjoys. He lis ens critically to the news on international television which he cannot watch, and perceives in his mind's eye the crisis o 'globalized capitalism and the need for a humane socialism. (n demand he will reel off chunks of texts of the roles he played decades ago. Physics, politics and dramatics continue to fuel the life of this indomitable spirit. He is an unyielding Samson who cannot be downtrodden by the trampling march of blind matter. Thank Dialectical Materialism for Osmund Jayaratne!

Carlo Fonscka is former. Denn. Faculty of Medicine, University of Kelaniya.